Q: SQL - With a correlated query, how do I get the first row where a value is not equal to another column's value? Example table: ID | Team | Player

----- 1 | 'A' | 'B' 2 | 'B' | 'C' 3 | 'C' | 'A' 4 | 'A' | 'C'

Desired result: ID | Team | Player ----- 1 | 'A' | 'B' 2 | 'B' | 'C'
I can get the first row that doesn't equal another value in the Team column using something like this: `SELECT * FROM Table1 WHERE Team!= 'A' ORDER BY ID DESC LIMIT 1`

This works fine; however, when I attempt to update the query to also get the Player column's value in the first query, I get syntax errors: `SELECT * FROM Table1 WHERE Team!= 'A' ORDER BY ID DESC LIMIT 1 AND Player!= 'B'` I tried using UNION to combine the two queries, but I get the same syntax errors as above. Any help would be greatly appreciated. A:

Create 2 correlated subquery that check the first set of values and the second set of values. Join the 2 correlated subquery and limit the result. `select * from (SELECT * FROM Table1`

`WHERE Team!= 'A' ORDER BY ID DESC LIMIT 1) A inner join (SELECT * FROM Table1 WHERE Player!= 'B' ORDER BY ID DESC LIMIT 1) B ON A.ID = B.ID , nor was there a`

Christian theory, with all its attendant difficulties. I will not deny that the theory helps the world by every possible moral and social need.... Such is

For the differentiation of tumors in the central nervous system, magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) is used on a daily basis. The contrast mechanism of the different available sequences can be divided into: (1) passive contrast, such as conventional T1- and T2-weighted imaging, (2) active contrast mechanisms, such as contrast enhancement due to vasodilation, and (3) a combination of both passive and active contrast mechanisms. These techniques can be used either separately or in combination. In this article, the different sequences and indications for each of these different MR techniques as they are applied in the brain and tumors and their advantages and disadvantages are reviewed. A fire on Jan. 15 has altered the plans for the new steakhouse, as some of the town's artisans have had to go back to the drawing board. After learning that the building's foundations were in poor shape, owner and chef Austin Pullum has put a hold on the building of the restaurant's bar until the town can provide a Certificate of Compliance with building codes. Pullum, who took over the property at 1015 S.
Bridgeport Ave. a month ago, originally announced last May that he was opening a steakhouse. Pullum had hoped to open the restaurant by Memorial Day, but his plans were put on hold. According to the report the building is in poor shape with an unusually small yard. Other buildings and apartment buildings line the bridge, and the alderman has asked the Pullum family to
